

PETER TRIANOTOS

“WHEN I PAINT, I PUT LOVE INTO MY WORK. LOVE IS KEY.”

ARTIST STATEMENT

Beginning a new work of art is super exciting for me. Often, I have a preconceived idea of creating something unique and stimulating that will intrigue myself and the viewer. However, the process creates its own flow, and encapsulates, solidifies and impregnates itself into the medium I am using.

As I transfer energy from my subconscious mind into the physical world, the form and structure manifests itself through each and every move I make until a balance is reached.

No two people perceive abstract art in the same way; it's what their intuition projects on it. This is the reason art moves people in such fascinating ways. Whether they are seeing my work for the first time, or whether it's a piece they have viewed several times, it's an entirely personal experience!

Like love, it can happen at first sight or develop over time.

The juxtaposition of free flowing black lines in the 'Black and White' abstract series allows for the emergence of the captivating contrast of the white background.

This is a collection of simplistic, abstract paintings with each piece inspiring different sets of emotions through brushstroke and splatter. Inspired by the Yin-Yang philosophy, the artist creates the sleek and chic artwork with the simplest of colours: black and white.

The energy between each shade creates a powerful vision while each brushstroke, shape, and line speak for themselves against the crisp, white canvas or any medium. The monochromatic palette exudes a timeless luxurious look.

INQUIRE ABOUT THE ART HERE

Toronto artist Peter Triantos says his painting, valued at $100,000, was stolen by a supposed art collector in July 2021. Police recovered the painting on Dec. 7. (Paul Borkwood/CBC)

Peter Triantos is a Toronto-based abstract artist whose work has been exhibited all over the world, but even so, he never thought someone would go so far as to steal one of his paintings.

This painting in particular was inspired by an album cover Basquiat had designed for a friend's punk band and was shown at an exhibit in Seoul, South Korea before returning to Triantos' studio in Toronto, where it was to be purchased in July 2021.

Artist had a 'weird little feeling'

Triantos said the transaction seemed relatively standard at first.

"He had done his research," Triantos said of the supposed art collector. "He knew the painting was in Korea. He knew the work. So I was happy the first time I met with him."

Thank you to the Toronto Metropolitan Police for returning Peter Triantos' artwork!

A humanitarian who loves to give back, Peter Triantos is delighted to continue his philanthropy by contributing to Camp Oochigeas' 'Paddle Project' for childhood cancer for which he chose the renowned 'Jelly Bean' design for the paddle he created to be auctioned.

In 1983 an ambitious group of volunteers banded together to form a summer camp in Canada, exclusively serving children with cancer, it would be privately funded, staffed entirely by volunteers and completely free. A camp where every child, no matter how debilitating their illness, would be provided an opportunity to explore enriching, challenging, fun experiences through what is fondly referred to today as the 'Magic of Ooch'

Exhibit at City Hall, in Nathan Phillips Square & Yorkdale Mall

Peter Triantos was honoured to be selected to create a sculpture for the Baycrest and TELUS Health Brain Project, in support of a great cause. His 'Jelly Bean' brain sculpture was displayed in that summer's largest outdoor exhibition in Toronto at City Hall in Nathan Phillips Square. It was then moved to be showcased at Yorkdale Mall, where it stayed on display until mid-November. This gorgeous sculpture was sold on the very first day! We would like to thank everyone who participated in this inspiring collaboration of art and imagination to bring greater awareness to brain health.
